

Senior Service Providers Hearing Loss Facts

Quality Care for Seniors

While living in a nursing home or a long-term care facility, residents are entitled to receive quality care, experience quality of life and exercise their rights.

Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 requires facilities who receive federal funds (including Medicare and Medicaid) to provide auxiliary aids to individuals with disabilities when needed to participate in a program or nursing home activity.

The Americans with Disabilities Act Title III, signed into law in 1990, mandates that a nursing home/assisted living facility (places of public accommodation) must ensure that health services are fully accessible and equally provided to individuals with disabilities. Full and equal access to care can be achieved through by removing physical barriers, providing "auxiliary aids and services," or making reasonable changes to policies, practices, and procedures. Failure to do so, the provider may be liable for medial malpractice and/or discrimination action.

In the United States...

48 million Americans have a significant hearing loss. (2011 National Health Interview Survey)

2.7 million veterans receive disability benefits for hearing loss. (2011 National Health Interview Survey)

Recent studies conducted by the National Institute on Aging reveals a link between untreated hearing loss and dementia, a greater incidence of balance problems, falls and stress related diseases such as heart disease and stroke.

Effective Communication & Accommodations

Accommodations

Why?

- Seniors lack information related to their medical care and participation is limited
- Involvement in activities is impeded
- Interaction with service providers and seniors is obstructed, which can lead to isolation, withdrawal and depression
- Be aware that what works for one senior may not work for the next one

How?

- Staff can learn and implement effective communication strategies
- Captioning should be activated on community TVs and senior's TVs
- Hire Sign Language Interpreter or Cart

Where?

EVERYWHERE!

- Deaf and Hard of Hearing seniors have the right to access to the same programs and services that are offered to all other seniors:
- TV
- Phones
- Social/recreational activities
- Religious Services
- Medical services
- Emergency-Visual Alert Signalers

Communication Tips

- Always get the person's attention before you start speaking
- Face the person and maintain normal eye contact
- Be sensitive to the visual environment
- Avoid bright lights that produce glare
- Do not shout or exaggerate mouth movements
- Speak at a normal pace, enunciating clearly
- Allow more time for communication
- Use gestures clearly
- To make conversations easier, place residents beds facing each other so that they can see each other's faces
- Provide accommodations

Effective communication is a must when critical information is being shared such as, but not limited to: being admitted, when the plan of care is being developed or explained, any medical procedure or signing any documents.
